Weather delightful.

Christmas has been and gone

The ball given at Little Nestucca was well attended and the affair was one of the grand occasions of the season.

Mrs. R. T. Weatherly is rapidly recovering from her late illness.

The city of Woods did things right royally Christmas eve. The leading society people arranged a beautiful tree loaded to almost breaking with costly gems and tokens of remembrance to their many friends, together with this a splendid programme was arranged, in which many took part. Old Santa as usual was present with his queer ways, quaint sayings and bundles of presents.

After the distribution of the presents, one of the grandest suppers we ever aided in making-away-with, was spread; surely it was a a feast for a king; every body just elbowed everybody else in the short-ribs and grinned; it wasn't the proper place to talk; all were too busy; so after crushing down our eloquence to make room for the other good things, we were gratified to learn there was plenty and to spare. Of course we thought, with this, our entertainment would conclude, but, imagine our surprise and joy, when a splendid string band appeared and the announcement was made to dance and be merry.
