

WOODS.

We have had an unusually fine winter. Everybody remarks, "What fine weather."

Stock looks well, and we appreciate the contrast between this winter and last.

Our school is going on quietly and pleasantly. The worst feature of it was the fire in the top of the school-house, the other day, originating from a defective stove-pipe; but the Woods fire department soon put an end to that trouble.

N. L. Fletcher had a fire in the roof of his house, a few days ago, which was extinguished before any material damage was done.

Some insurance agent might do well at Woods, at present, as a very small amount of the property here is insured.

A. B. Pollard has sold his saloon property to B. McPhillips.

Dr. Linton is preparing to erect a commodious residence for himself, in Woods. The Doctor has a good practice and expresses himself as well pleased with our country.

Mr. Phelps has not been heard from yet. He disappeared very mysteriously; we cannot conceive what has become of him. He has been in business at this place for some eight or nine years, has had a good trade, has a fair stock of merchandise on hand at present, but he is gone.

HAWKEYE.